The stairs continued to wind upward into darkness. He looked backwards, and the shadows seemed to be slowly creeping upon him. His whiskers twitched. He cursed silently and turned back the way he had come, knowing that it would take forever to get back down to the bottom. Then, less than a dozen steps down, he met the floor. He found himself in a large hall, unfurnished except for large red velvet curtains that hung from the ceiling. They didn't cover any windows and most were not even against the wall. They hung everywhere about the hall, and behind each one a warrior could stand comfortably waiting in ambush. A door opened at the other end, and a black-clad warrior stepped through. In one hand he held a sword and in the other, a large crescent-bladed axe with a rabbit's foot hanging from the pommel. When the slayer saw Kelkor at the other end of the curtained hall, he snarled and charged, his footfalls echoing like thunder. Sharnath! Kelkor shouted. Are you nuts? He took a step back and felt his heel come down on something sharp, and out of nowhere, something cracked him in the back of the head, staggering him. He reeled into one of the hanging curtains and stepped on what felt like a row of metal fangs, and something struck him full on in the snout, blinding him with white light. Sharnath continued to bear down on him, his eyes blazing with rage. Rallying himself, Kelkor swung at the curtain and wheeled about, striking at the one that first smote him. The heavy...
