The great exposition to be held in St. Louis in 1903, in commemoration of the Louisiana Purchase, will be the twentieth century manifestation of the worlds progress and civilizations achievement; and because it will be thus, distinctively, epochmarking, the spirit of the new century will be invoked to make it the greatest exposition that the world has ever seen. Its plans are laid upon the broadest lines, unlimited money has been secured and the execution of the gigantic enterprise is committed to capable hands, justifying the belief that the realization will reflect the dream of its projectors, and be in keeping with the great historical event of a century ago, that it is designed to commemorate. The occasion of the exposition will summon American patriotism to its support; it was the first and most gigantic experiment in expansion undertaken by the republic, and its audacity, no less than the wisdom of it, was characteristic of the courage and genius of the author of the Declaration of Independence. It wiped out the bisecting line of the continent by making both banks of the Mississippi our own, and thus made inevitable the subsequent extensions of our boundaries to the Pacific. It was the most superb achievement of statesmanship in our history. and in its...
