Of these plants only two of lot 1, one of lot 2, two of lot 9, and one of lot 13 became affected with stem-rot while in the field. During the present season the only point under test is a comparison of the effect of chemicals versus stable manure as a fertilizer for the plants. So far nothing has appeared which changes the indications noted in the last annual report, namely, that new clean sand, carrying no traces of the disease, and the use of soil in which carnations have not previously been grown are the most important conditions to be secured. Thus far our experiments do not seem to bear out the prevalent opinion that stable manure favors the spread of the disease. Resistance to Frost.--Gardeners will recall the apparent peculiarities often manifest in the behavior of plants subject to frost. Two plants of the same variety, standing side by side, may show altogether different results, the one being killed or severely injured and the other remaining practically untouched. At times these differences may be due to varying atmospheric conditions, but much of it must be the result of difference in inherent vigor and resistance of the individual plants. Is it possible in the case of tender plants, by selecting and breeding from those individuals which show greatest resistance, to develop a hardier strain? This question has been under test with garden beans. Three varieties of...
