The famous guild of Antwerp painters admitted him with pride to be one of their company, and his pictures would be highly esteemed to this day but that they are commonly attributed to other masters, for he never signed his name to any of his works. Of the four Words by whose guidance he had tried to shape his life he had learned to condemn Glory and Power. Fortune and Art remained faithful to him, it is true; for just as the earth has no brightness in itself, but derives its light from the sun, so did Fortune and Art borrow all their splendor, charm, and power from Love. The reckless Electo, whose sword had raged in the fight, had now become a good-hearted neighbor in the fullest Christian sense of the word, and of his worthy master s...
